PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

The Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press ("Reporters Committee") seeks access to certain sealed court records, including dockets and docket entries, relating to the completed criminal investigation and prosecution of John C. Kiriakou ("Kiriakou") (hereinafter, the "Kiriakou Matter"). Specifically, the Reporters Committee seeks an order unsealing any and all applications and supporting documents, including affidavits, seeking any of the following; any court orders granting or denying any of the following; and any other court records related to the following, such as returns, motions to seal, miscellaneous dockets and docket entries:

- any search warrant, regardless of whether the warrant was issued or executed, and including warrants under the Stored Communications Act ("SCA"), see 18 U.S.C. §§ 2701–2712, that relates to the Kiriakou Matter (collectively, the "Search Warrant Materials");
- authorization for the use of any pen register or trap and trace device pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §§ 3121–3127, regardless of whether such authorization was granted or a pen register or trap and trace device was used, that relates to the Kiriakou Matter (collectively, the "PR/TT Materials"); and
- any order pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 2703(d) of the SCA, regardless of whether or not the order was issued or executed, that relates to the Kiriakou Matter (collectively, the "Section 2703(d) Materials").

Court records of this type are routinely maintained under seal and are generally not reflected on publicly available dockets. Accordingly, the Reporters Committee does not know and cannot ascertain the docket number(s) associated with the Search Warrant Materials, PR/TT Materials, and Section 2703(d) Materials it seeks to unseal.

The United States government's prosecution of Kiriakou for allegedly disclosing classified national defense information to members of the news media was and remains the subject of intense public interest. Unsealing the Search Warrant Materials, PR/TT Materials, and Section 2703(d) Materials will shed light on the government's investigation and prosecution of Kiriakou, which has now concluded, and will also provide the public and the press with valuable insight into the government's approach to leak investigations and prosecutions more generally. In particular, unsealing of these materials will inform the press and the public about the government's use of electronic surveillance tools like PR/TT devices and Section 2703(d) orders in connection with leak investigations.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

1. The government's investigation and prosecution of Kiriakou is a matter of ongoing public interest.

In October 2012, Kiriakou pled guilty in this Court to a single count of disclosing information identifying a covert officer in violation of 50 U.S.C. § 421(b). In January 2013, the Court accepted Kiriakou's guilty plea, sentenced him to thirty months' imprisonment and three years of supervised release, and ordered him to pay a $100 assessment. See Judgment, United States v. Kiriakou, No. 1:12-cr-00127-LMB ("Kiriakou") (E.D. Va. filed Jan. 25, 2013), ECF No. 128. Kiriakou's indictment and subsequent guilty plea arose out of a government investigation into, inter alia, Kiriakou's communications with at least two reporters. Although it does not identify the reporters by name, the indictment cites to a story written by a New York Times reporter, Scott Shane. Indictment, Kiriakou (E.D. Va. filed Apr. 5, 2012), ECF No. 22, at 12–15 (the "Indictment"). In 2008, The New York Times published an article by Shane that quoted Kiriakou and discussed a CIA analyst's associations with a specific CIA operation and counterterrorism program. See Scott Shane, Inside a 9/11 Mastermind's Interrogation, N.Y.

Times (Jun. 22, 2008), at http://nyti.ms/1Tg4AEm (the "Shane Article"). The government alleged that Kiriakou had served as a source of information for that article. See Indictment, ECF No. 22, at 12–13. Several news organizations have reported that a second journalist, reportedly referred to in the Indictment as "Journalist A," is freelance reporter Matthew Cole. See Steve Coll, The Spy Who Said Too Much, The New Yorker (Apr. 1, 2013), at https://perma.cc/ZNL8-HBTG; Josh Gerstein, Three Journalists Subpoenaed by Defense in CIA Leak Case, Politico (Oct. 11, 2012), at https://perma.cc/EEU5-WEJ9.

The government's investigation and resulting prosecution of Kiriakou were an immediate subject of intense public interest. The media reported extensively on the Kiriakou Matter, as well as an overall increase in the number of government leak investigations and prosecutions. See, e.g., Charlie Savage, Ex-C.I.A. Officer Charged in Information Leak, N.Y. Times (Jan. 23, 2012), available at http://nyti.ms/1On4gzS; Scott Shane, Ex-Officer is First from C.I.A. to Face Prison for a Leak, N.Y. Times (Jan. 5, 2013), available at http://nyti.ms/2eFACix; Coll, supra. Although the Kiriakou Matter ended years ago, public interest in the case has been ongoing, periodically spurred by similar high-profile leak investigations such as the 2015 conviction of former CIA officer Jeffrey Sterling. See Matt Apuzzo, C.I.A. Officer is Found Guilty in Leak Tied to Times Reporter, N.Y. Times (Jan. 26, 2015), available at http://nyti.ms/1CZvpUT.

2. Search Warrant Materials, PR/TT Materials, and Section 2703(d) Materials related to the Kiriakou Matter remain under seal.

Documents filed with the Court in the Kiriakou prosecution indicate that the government sought and obtained search warrants, and likely also obtained pen register or trap and trace orders,[1] and/or Section 2703(d) orders[2] from the district court in the course of its investigation of

[1] Pen registers and trap and trace devices are law enforcement surveillance tools the use of which is governed by 18 U.S.C. §§ 3121–3127 (the "Pen Register Act" or "PRA"). "Pen registers

Kiriakou. The Affidavit filed with the Complaint states that emails were obtained by the government "from search warrants served on two email accounts associated with Kiriakou[.]" See Affidavit to Complaint, Kiriakou (E.D. Va. filed Jan. 23, 2012), ECF No. 2, at 14. Moreover, the government asserted in its Affidavit that Kiriakou "repeatedly made unauthorized and illegal disclosures of classified information to persons, including reporters, not authorized to receive classified information." See Affidavit, ECF No. 2, at 5–6. Thus, the government, as part of its investigation of Kiriakou, may have utilized electronic surveillance tools to target journalists' communications records. See generally id. (noting at least three journalists that Kiriakou communicated with).

The Reporters Committee is not aware of any search warrants, orders authorizing the use of pen registers and/or trap and trace devices, or Section 2703(d) orders, or any applications or other materials related thereto, connected to the Kiriakou Matter that have been unsealed. The Reporters Committee therefore requests that such court records—including the relevant dockets and docket sheets—be unsealed, and that, to the extent necessary to facilitate such unsealing, the U.S. Attorney's Office be directed to provide a list of the specific docket numbers associated with the materials sought to be unsealed by this Application.

"Trap and trace devices record similar information that is received by such instruments or facilities." Id. (emphasis added).

[2] Under 18 U.S.C. § 2703 of the Stored Communications Act ("SCA") a court may issue an order authorizing the government to require electronic communication service or remote computing service providers to disclose the contents of a subscriber or consumer's wire or electronic communications in electronic storage for more than 180 days and certain communications metadata related to a subscriber or customer. 18 U.S.C. § 2703(a), (b)(1), (c)(1)-(2).

ARGUMENT

I. The press and the public have a powerful interest in access to Warrant Materials, PR/TT Materials, and Section 2703(d) Materials.

Openness is "an indispensable attribute" of our judicial system. Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555, 569 (1980). It guards against unfairness and inequity in the application of laws, as "the sure knowledge that anyone is free to attend gives assurance that established procedures are being followed and that deviations will become known." Press-Enter. Co. v. Superior Court, 464 U.S. 501, 508 (1984) ("Press-Enterprise I"). "[P]ublic access promotes not only the public's interest in monitoring the functioning of the courts but also the integrity of the judiciary." Doe v. Pub. Citizen, 749 F.3d 246, 266 (4th Cir. 2014) ("Public Citizen"). Perhaps just as importantly, access also "provide[s] the public with a more complete understanding of the judicial system, including a better perception of fairness." Id. (quoting Littlejohn v. Bic Corp., 851 F.2d 673, 682 (3d Cir. 1988)). As the U.S. Supreme Court has explained, "People in an open society do not demand infallibility from their institutions, but it is difficult for them to accept what they are prohibited from observing." Richmond Newspapers, 448 U.S. at 572.

The U.S. Supreme Court has also recognized that the news media plays a vital role in facilitating public monitoring of the judicial system.

> A responsible press has always been regarded the handmaiden of effective judicial administration, especially in the criminal field. . . . The press does not simply publish information about trials but guards against the miscarriage of justice by subjecting the police, prosecutors, and judicial processes to extensive public scrutiny and criticism.

Sheppard v. Maxwell, 384 U.S. 333, 350 (1966). Thus, "[w]hile media representatives enjoy the same right of access as the public," they often "function[] as surrogates for the public" by, for example, attending proceedings, reviewing court documents, and reporting on judicial matters to the public at large. Richmond Newspapers, 448 U.S. at 573.

For these reasons, it is well-settled that the public and the press have a right of access to court documents, generally, that arises from the public's interest in observing the consideration and disposition of matters by federal courts. See Public Citizen, 749 F.3d at 266 (explaining that "public access promotes not only the public's interest in monitoring the functioning of the courts but also the integrity of the judiciary").

The public's right of access is especially strong in matters, like the Kiriakou Matter, that concern actions taken by the executive branch. As the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has explained, "'in such circumstances, the public's right to know what the executive branch is about coalesces with the concomitant right of the citizenry to appraise the judicial branch.'" Smith v. United States Dist. Court for S. Dist., 956 F.2d 647, 650 (7th Cir. 1992) (quoting FTC v. Standard Fin. Mgmt. Corp., 830 F.2d 404, 410 (1st Cir. 1987)); see also United States v. Aref, 533 F.3d 72, 83 (2d Cir. 2008) (stating the "courts must impede scrutiny of the exercise of [judicial] judgment only in the rarest of circumstances," especially "when a judicial decision accedes to the requests of a coordinate branch"). This district, too, has recognized that there is always a "firmly rooted common law right of the public to have access to records of judicial proceedings," but "there is an even stronger justification for public access to judicial records where, as here, the proceedings consist of matters involving the operation of government." U.S. ex rel. Doe v. X Corp., 862 F. Supp. 1502, 1510 (E.D. Va. 1994).

Moreover, the press and the public have a particularly powerful interest in obtaining access to the specific court records that are the subject of this Application. The Reporters Committee seeks to unseal court records relating to judicial authorization for the government's use of certain electronic surveillance tools—a process that is generally shrouded in secrecy. And it seeks access to such records in connection with a closed investigation in which the government obtained, through search warrants, email communications with multiple journalists. Public access to still sealed court records concerning search warrants, orders authorizing the use of pen registers and trap and trace devices, and Section 2703(d) orders in connection with the Kiriakou Matter will provide the public and the press with much-needed insight into the government's use of electronic surveillance tools in leak investigations in general, and in connection with the Kiriakou Matter, specifically.

II. The press and the public have both a constitutional and common law right to access the sealed Search Warrant Materials, PR/TT Materials, and Section 2703(d) Materials.

"It is well settled that the public and the press have a qualified right of access to judicial documents and records filed in civil and criminal proceedings" that "springs from the First Amendment and the common-law tradition that court proceedings are presumptively open to public scrutiny." Public Citizen, 749 F.3d at 265 (internal citations omitted). "The distinction between the rights of access afforded by the common law and the First Amendment is significant" in the Fourth Circuit. Id. (internal quotation omitted). The common law right "extends to all judicial documents and records, and the presumption can be rebutted only by showing that countervailing interests heavily outweigh the public interests in access." Id. at 265–66 (internal quotations omitted). The First Amendment right, by contrast, applies "only to particular judicial records and documents"; when it applies, "access may be restricted only if closure is necessitated by a compelling government interest and the denial of access is narrowly tailored to serve that interest." Id. at 266 (internal quotations and citations omitted).

The common law provides a right of access to all judicial records and documents. See Nixon v. Warner Commc'ns, 435 U.S. 589, 597 (1978); Public Citizen, 749 F.3d at 265–66. The common law right is grounded in "the public's ability to keep a 'watchful eye on the workings of public agencies.'" In re Policy Mgmt. Systems Corp., 67 F.3d 296, 1995 WL 541623 at *7 (4th Cir. 1995) (per curiam) (quoting Nixon, 435 U.S. at 597–98). Accordingly, the common law right is largely controlled by "whether public access plays a significant positive role in the functioning" of the proceedings. Press-Enter. Co. v. Superior Court, 478 U.S. 1, 8 (1986) ("Press-Enterprise II"). The presumption can be rebutted only by showing that "countervailing interests heavily outweigh the public interests in access." Public Citizen, 749 F.3d at 266 (citation omitted).

To determine whether the First Amendment right of access applies to a particular type of proceeding or document, the Fourth Circuit has instructed courts to consider both "experience and logic," i.e. (1) "whether the place and process have historically been open to the press and general public," and (2) "whether public access plays a significant positive role in the functioning of the particular process in question." Press–Enterprise II, 478 U.S. at 8, 9; Baltimore Sun Co. v. Goetz, 886 F.2d 60, 64 (4th Cir. 1989). If both of these questions are answered affirmatively, the constitutional right of access applies. Id.

A. The common law and First Amendment rights of access apply to the Search Warrant Materials.

1. The public has a common law right of access to the Search Warrant Materials.

The Fourth Circuit has recognized the public's common law right of access to search warrant materials such as affidavits in support of search warrant applications. See Matter of Application & Affidavit for a Search Warrant, 923 F.2d 324, 330 (4th Cir. 1991). Affirming the lower court's decision to unseal a search warrant affidavit before trial, the Court found that the public had "significant interests" in access to search warrant materials, and "[i]n the context of the criminal justice system, these interests may be magnified." Id.; see also Baltimore Sun Co., 886 F.2d at 64 (finding that "affidavits for search warrants are judicial records").

Other federal courts of appeals have almost uniformly found that search warrant materials in closed investigations are judicial records to which the common law right of access applies. See In re Search of Fair Finance, 692 F.3d 424, 433 (6th Cir. 2012) (stating that "the common law right of access to judicial documents may in some situations permit access to search warrant proceedings," including documents); United States v. Business of Custer Battlefield Museum and Store, 658 F.3d 1188, 1192 (9th Cir. 2011) (finding that the common law right of access applies to search warrant applications and their supporting affidavits after the government's criminal investigation ended); In re EyeCare Physicians of America, 100 F.3d 514, 517 (7th Cir. 1996) (holding that the common law right of access applies to a search warrant affidavit); In re Newsday, Inc., 895 F.2d 74, 79 (2d Cir. 1990) (finding that a search warrant application is "a public document subject to a common law right of access" at the post-investigation stage).

2. The public has a First Amendment right of access to the Search Warrant Materials.

Although the Fourth Circuit has rejected a request for access to search warrant materials under the First Amendment while the government's investigation was still ongoing, the Court in that case explicitly reserved the question of whether the First Amendment right of access would apply to search warrant materials after the investigation ended. Baltimore Sun Co., 886 F.2d at 64–65. And courts in other circuits have held that there is a First Amendment right of access to search warrant materials after the conclusion of the government's investigation. See United States v. Loughner, 769 F. Supp. 2d 1188, 1195 (D. Ariz. 2011); United States v. Kott, 380 F. Supp. 2d 1122, 1124-25 (C.D. Cal. 2004), aff'd on other grounds, 135 Fed. Appx. 69 (9th Cir.

2005); see also In re Search Warrant for Secretarial Area Outside Office of Gunn, 855 F.2d 569, 573 (8th Cir. 1988) ("In re Gunn") (finding a First Amendment right of access to warrant materials even while investigation is still ongoing). Those courts that have rejected a claim of access under the First Amendment to search warrant materials, like the Fourth Circuit in Baltimore Sun, have done so in cases in which the government's investigation was still ongoing. See Times Mirror Co. v. United States, 873 F.2d 1210, 1221 (9th Cir. 1989); United States v. All Funds on Deposit at Wells Fargo Bank, 643 F. Supp. 2d 577, 583 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) .

Based on this precedent and application of the experience and logic test, the First Amendment right of access applies to the Search Warrant Materials at issue in this case. The government has concluded its investigation; Kiriakou pled guilty and was sentenced in 2012. As other courts have recognized, such post-investigation search warrant materials "have historically been available to the public." In re Application of N.Y. Times, 585 F. Supp. 2d 83, 88 (D.D.C. 2008). In addition, public access to the Search Warrant Materials will play "a significant positive role in the functioning" of the process at issue. Press-Enterprise II, 478 U.S. at 8. Public access will "serve[] as a check on the judiciary," In re Application of N.Y. Times, 585 F. Supp. 2d at 90, as well as a potential "curb on prosecutorial . . . misconduct," In re Gunn, 855 F.2d at 573.

B. The First Amendment and common law rights of access apply to the Section 2703(d) and PR/TT Materials.

1. The public has a common law right of access to the Section 2703(d) and PR/TT Materials.

The common law right of access also clearly applies to the Section 2703(d) and PR/TT Materials. The Fourth Circuit has had "no difficulty holding that the actual § 2703(d) orders and subsequent orders issued by the court are judicial records." In re United States for an Order

Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. Section 2703(D), 707 F.3d 283, 290 (4th Cir. 2013) ("In re United States") (stating that "it is commonsensical that judicially authored or created documents are judicial records."). Keeping with this principle, courts have held that the common law right of access attaches to Section 2703(d) orders, as well as orders authorizing the use of PR/TT devices. See id.; In re Application of the U.S. for an Order Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. Section 2703(d), 830 F. Supp. 2d 114, 151–52 (E.D. Va. 2011) (applying the common law right of access balancing test to materials related to a Section 2703(d) order); In re Sealing & Non-Disclosure of PR/TT/2703(D) Orders, 562 F. Supp. 2d 876, 891 (S.D. Tex. 2008) ("In re Sealing") (writing that "opinions, orders, judgments, docket sheets, and other information related to the court's public functions" are in the "top drawer of judicial records" that are "hardly ever closed to the public"). Accordingly, the Section 2703(d) orders, orders authorizing the use of PR/TT devices, and any subsequent, related court orders issued in connection with the Kiriakou investigation and prosecution are judicial records subject to a strong presumption of access under the common law.

In addition, just as applications and supporting affidavits for search warrants are judicial records, applications and supporting affidavits for Section 2703(d) orders and orders authorizing the use of PR/TT devices are likewise judicial records because, among other things, they are considered by the court in determining whether to issue the order being sought by the government. See Baltimore Sun Co., 886 F.2d at 64 ("We therefore conclude that affidavits for search warrants are judicial records."); In re United States, 707 F.3d at 290 (holding that motions filed under Section 2703(d) were judicial records because they were filed with the objective of obtaining judicial action or relief pertaining to Section 2703(d) orders).

Section 2703(d) provides that the court shall issue a Section 2703(d) order "only if the governmental entity offers specific and articulable facts showing that there are reasonable grounds to believe" the communications content or communications metadata "are relevant and material to an ongoing criminal investigation." 18 U.S.C. § 2703(d). Thus, the applications and supporting affidavits form the basis for the court's determination of whether the government has met the statutory standard for issuance of a Section 2703(d) order, which is "essentially a reasonable suspicion standard." In re United States, 707 F.3d at 287. Likewise, before a court enters an order authorizing the installation and use of a pen register or trap and trace device, it must conclude that "the attorney for the Government has certified to the court that the information likely to be obtained by such installation and use is relevant to an ongoing criminal investigation." 18 U.S.C. § 3123(a)(1). The government's application thus plays a decisive role in the court's determination as to whether use of a PR/TT device should be authorized or a Section 2703(d) order issued.

Finally, motions related to Section 2703(d) orders and PR/TT orders other than applications also play a key role in the adjudicatory process and therefore are judicial records. Such derivative motions are filed with the objective of obtaining judicial action or relief, and the court relies upon such filings in granting or denying the relief sought. Consistent with this reasoning, the Fourth Circuit has held that derivative Section 2703(d) motions are judicial records because they play a role in the adjudicative process; namely, "they were filed with the objective of obtaining judicial action or relief pertaining to § 2703(d) orders." In re United States, 707 F.3d at 291. For these reasons, any derivative Section 2703(d) and PR/TT motions are judicial records to which the common law right of access applies.

2. The public has a First Amendment right of access to the Section 2703(d) and PR/TT Materials.

To date, no federal court of appeals has squarely addressed the question of whether the First Amendment right of access applies to Section 2703(d) orders in the context of a closed investigation. The Fourth Circuit addressed the question in the context of an ongoing criminal investigation and concluded that the First Amendment right of access did not apply only in that context. In re United States, 707 F.3d at 292. In that case, petitioners sought access to Section 2703(d) orders and related documents at the pre-grand jury phase. Id. at 286. The Fourth Circuit found that, at that early phase in the proceedings, "secrecy is necessary for the proper functioning of the criminal investigations," and that "openness will frustrate the government's operations." Id. at 292. Similarly, a court in the Eastern District of Virginia found no justification for unsealing certain documents related to a Section 2703(d) order because there is "no history of openness for documents related to an ongoing criminal investigation," and there were "concerns that publication of the documents at this juncture will hamper the investigatory process." In re Section 2703(d), 787 F. Supp. 2d 430, 443 (E.D. Va. 2011) (emphasis added). In contrast, there is no ongoing investigation here; Kiriakou has been indicted, pled guilty, and been sentenced. See id. at 442 (contrasting the ongoing investigation in that case to Matter of Application and Affidavit for a Search Warrant, 923 F.2d at 326, in which the Fourth Circuit affirmed a decision to unseal a search warrant affidavit because the investigation had concluded). Accordingly, In re United States and In re Section 2703(d) are inapposite.

The Section 2703(d) Materials and PR/TT Materials at issue here are analogous to search warrant materials from closed investigations. As discussed above, other courts have held that search warrant materials are subject to the First Amendment right of access in the post-investigation context. See, e.g., In re Application of N.Y. Times, 585 F. Supp. 2d at 90. Relying on this persuasive precedent, and applying the experience and logic test, it is clear that the First Amendment right of access applies to both the Section 2703(d) Materials and PR/TT Materials.

First, the tradition of public access to post-investigation search warrant materials applies to the Section 2703(d) Materials and PR/TT Materials. See U.S. v. El-Sayegh, 131 F.3d 158, 161 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (stating that "[a] new procedure that substituted for an older one would presumably be evaluated by the tradition of access to the older procedure"); see also United States v. Gonzales, 150 F.3d 1246, 1256 (10th Cir. 1998) (noting that the experience prong may be satisfied by establishing a history of access to information "reasonably analogous" to the information sought). As the D.C. District Court recognized in In re Application of N.Y. Times, "post-investigation warrant materials . . . have historically been available to the public," as shown by the "routine historical practice" of filing warrant applications and receipts with the clerk of court without seal. See In re Application of N.Y. Times, 585 F. Supp. 2d at 88. Moreover, that court found that the historic common law right of access to warrant materials, which was "an appropriate consideration to take into account when examining the scope of First Amendment," also "weigh[ed] strongly in favor of a First Amendment qualified right of access to warrant materials." Id. at 89. The Section 2703(d) and PR/TT Materials, which are analogous to search warrants, must be evaluated by this same historic tradition of access. See El-Sayegh, 131 F.3d at 161; Gonzales, 150 F.3d at 1256.

Second, just as with post-investigation search warrants, logic strongly supports a First Amendment right of access to the Section 2703(d) and PR/TT Materials at issue here. See In re Application of N.Y. Times, 585 F. Supp. 2d at 90 ("Specifically, with respect to warrants, openness plays a significant positive role in the functioning of the criminal justice system, at least in the post-investigation stage."). Because Section 2703(d) orders and orders authorizing the use of PR/TT devices function like warrants, but may be obtained on a showing lower than the probable cause standard that must be satisfied to obtain a search warrant under Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 41, see 18 U.S.C. § 2703(d) and 18 U.S.C. § 3123(a)(1), access to such materials arguably plays an even more "significant positive role in the functioning of the criminal justice system." In re Application of N.Y. Times Co., 585 F. Supp. 2d at 90.[3] Access to the Section 2703(d) and PR/TT Materials at issue here will allow the public to scrutinize the arguments the government put forth in support of their applications for Section 2703(d) orders and orders authorizing the use of PR/TT devices in connection with its investigation of Kiriakou, as well as the basis for any court order granting or denying such applications. Thus, access will allow the public to serve as a check on prosecutors and "is necessary in the long run so that the public can judge the product of the courts in a given case." See Virginia Dep't of State Police v. Wash. Post, 386 F.3d 567, 575 (4th Cir. 2004) (quoting Columbus-America Discovery Group v. Atlanta Mut. Ins. Co., 203 F.3d 291, 303 (4th Cir. 2000)); see also In re Gunn, 855 F.2d at 573.

III. The press and the public have both a constitutional and common law right to access the court dockets for the Search Warrant Materials, PR/TT Materials, and Section 2703(d) Materials.

Both the common law and constitutional rights of access extend to court dockets, which reflect court records related to search warrants, PR/TT devices, and Section 2703(d) orders. The common law right extends to dockets because sealing dockets in their entirety creates a "two-tier system, open and closed," that erodes "[c]onfidence in the accuracy of [the court's] records" and "the authority of its rulings and respect due its judgments." CBS, Inc. v. U.S. Dist. Court for Cent. Dist. of Cal., 765 F.2d 823, 826 (9th Cir. 1985). In addition, several Circuits, including the [3] Orders authorizing the installation and use of PR/TT devices may be obtained ex parte by the government on a certification that "the information likely to be obtained by such installation and use is relevant to an ongoing criminal investigation." 18 U.S.C. § 3123(a)(1). A Section 2703(d) order may be issued "if the governmental entity offers specific and articulable facts showing that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the contents of a wire or electronic communication, or the records or other information sought, are relevant and material to an ongoing criminal investigation." 18 U.S.C. § 2703(d).

Fourth Circuit, have recognized that the constitutional right of access also extends to court dockets. See Public Citizen, 749 F.3d at 268 (holding that there is a First Amendment right of access to dockets in civil proceedings); In re State–Record Co., 917 F.2d 124, 129 (4th Cir. 1990) (per curiam) (reversing the sealing of criminal docket sheets as overbroad and incompatible with the First Amendment presumptive right of access and stating, "we can not understand how the docket entry sheet could be prejudicial"); Hartford Courant Co. v. Pellegrino, 380 F.3d 83, 93–94 (2d Cir. 2004) (holding that docket sheets in civil and criminal proceedings "enjoy a presumption of openness and that the public and the media possess a qualified First Amendment right to inspect them"); Tri-Cty. Wholesale Distributors, Inc. v. Wine Grp., Inc., 565 F. App'x 477, 490 (6th Cir. 2012) ("The First Amendment access right extends to court dockets, records, pleadings, and exhibits . . ."). The public and the press therefore have a right to access the docket sheets reflecting the Search Warrant, Section 2703(d), and PR/TT Materials related to the Kiriakou Matter.

IV. The Government cannot meet its burden to overcome the presumption of access to the Search Warrant Materials, PR/TT Materials, and Section 2703(d) Materials.

A. The government cannot overcome the common law presumption in favor of disclosure of the Search Warrant, Section 2703(d), and PR/TT Materials.

"Regardless of whether the right of access arises from the First Amendment or the common law, it 'may be abrogated only in unusual circumstances.'" Virginia Dep't of State Police, 386 F.3d at 576 (quoting Stone v. Univ. of Md. Med. Sys. Corp., 855 F.2d 178, 180 (4th Cir. 1988)). The common law presumption "in favor of access," Matter of Application and Affidavit for a Search Warrant, 923 F.2d at 329, can be rebutted only upon a showing that countervailing interests "heavily outweigh" the public's interest in access. Rushford v. New Yorker Magazine, 846 F.2d 249, 253 (4th Cir. 1988). The party seeking to overcome this presumption bears the burden of showing "some significant interest" outweighing the presumption. Virginia Dep't of State Police, 386 F.3d at 575. In evaluating a request for access to court records under the common law, courts in the Fourth Circuit will consider "whether the records are sought for improper purposes, such as promoting public scandals or unfairly gaining a business advantage; whether release would enhance the public's understanding of an important historical event; and whether the public has already had access to the information contained in the records." Id. (quoting In re Knight Publ. Co., 743 F.2d 231, 235 (4th Cir. 1984)).

Under this test, the Search Warrant, Section 2703(d), and PR/TT Materials should be unsealed. First, none of the court records at issue are being sought for an improper purpose; the Reporters Committee seeks access to them for the benefit of the press and public at large. Second, the sealed materials at issue here would inform the public's understanding of the Kiriakou Matter, one of a number of important, high-profile leak prosecutions pursued by the government under the Obama Administration. Finally, some of the information sought is already in the public forum. The public knows that Kiriakou's email communications were a target of search warrants, that he was indicted for allegedly disclosing national defense information to journalists, and that he pled guilty to a criminal charge. Accordingly, even though the Search Warrant, Section 2703(d), and PR/TT Materials are sealed, much of their underlying subject matter is in the public forum, weighing in favor of disclosure. Moreover, the government no longer has an interest in keeping these records sealed because the Kiriakou Matter has ended, and Kiriakou has been sentenced. Cf. In re Section 2703(d), 787 F. Supp. 2d at 442–43 (finding that because the investigation was ongoing, "the government's interest in keeping these documents sealed for the time being outweighs petitioners' interest in access them") (emphasis added); In re Application of the U.S. for an Order Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. Section 2703(d), 830 F. Supp. 2d at 151–52 (applying the common law balancing test to a Section 2703(d) application and supporting materials, and finding that the government had a "compelling interest in protecting its ongoing investigation") (emphasis added).

On the other side of the common law balancing test, the public interest in access to the Search Warrant, Section 2703(d), and PR/TT Materials is exceptionally strong. The Kiriakou prosecution and investigation were the subjects of considerable public attention, and the public has "legitimate concerns about methods and techniques of [that] . . . investigation," Matter of Application and Affidavit for a Search Warrant, 923 F.2d at 330, including specifically how the government obtained and used search warrants, Section 2703(d) orders, and pen registers and trap and trace devices. The Fourth Circuit and the U.S. Supreme Court have recognized the importance of the public interest in "keep[ing] a watchful eye on the workings of public agencies" and "publish[ing] information concerning the operation of government," id. (quoting Nixon, 435 U.S. at 597–98), and that this interest is "magnified" in the context of the criminal justice system. Id.

In sum, because the common law balancing test weighs heavily in favor of disclosure and no factors weigh against disclosure, the Court should grant the Reporters Committee's Application to unseal the Search Warrant, Section 2703(d), and PR/TT Materials pursuant to the common law right of access.

B. The government cannot demonstrate a compelling interest that justifies the continued sealing of the Search Warrant, Section 2703(d), and PR/TT Materials.

The First Amendment right of access is "much stronger than the guarantee provided by the common law." Level 3 Commc'ns, LLC v. Limelight Networks, Inc., 611 F. Supp. 2d 572, 577 (E.D. Va. 2009); see Rushford, 846 F.2d at 253 (stating that the First Amendment right is "more rigorous"). A document to which the First Amendment right of access applies may remain under seal only if "specific, on the record findings are made demonstrating that 'closure is essential to preserve higher values and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest.'" Press–Enterprise II, 478 U.S. at 13–14 (quoting Press–Enterprise I, 464 U.S. at 510). Put another way, the constitutional right of access is overcome only if "(1) closure serves a compelling interest; (2) there is a 'substantial probability' that, in the absence of closure, that compelling interest would be harmed; and (3) there are no alternatives to closure that would adequately protect that compelling interest." In re Wash. Post Co., 807 F.2d 383, 390 (4th Cir. 1986).

Because the government's investigation of Kiriakou has concluded there is no compelling interest in the continued sealing of the Search Warrant, Section 2703(d), and PR/TT Materials. Indeed, in light of Kiriakou's guilty plea, there is no law enforcement interest that would be implicated by public disclosure of the Search Warrant, Section 2703(d), and PR/TT Materials. See Rushford, 846 F.2d at 252 (citing In re Wash. Post Co., 807 F.2d at 389, for the proposition that "because the taking of a guilty plea serves as a substitute for a trial, it may reasonably be treated in the same manner as a trial for First Amendment purposes"). And, even if the government could identify some compelling interest that justified sealing some portion of the Search Warrant, Section 2703(d), or PR/TT Materials, redaction—not wholesale sealing—would be the appropriate means of addressing that interest. See Johnson v. Baltimore City Police Dept., No. 12-cv-2519, 2013 WL 497868 at *3–5 (D. Md. Feb. 7, 2013) ("If a court record is subject to the First Amendment right of public access, the record may be sealed 'only on the basis of a compelling governmental interest, and only if the denial is narrowly tailored to serve that interest." (internal quotations and citation omitted)); Press-Enterprise I, 464 U.S. at 510 (finding that closure of records must be narrowly tailored to serve the compelling government interest).

CONCLUSION

The press and public have a right of access to the Search Warrant, Section 2703(d), and PR/TT Materials related to the government's completed investigation and prosecution of Kiriakou under both the common law and the First Amendment. The Court should, for the foregoing reasons, grant the Reporters Committee's Application for an order unsealing the Search Warrant, Section 2703(d), and PR/TT Materials.
