Re: Access to records in the court-martial of Pfc. Bradley Manning

Dear Mr. Johnson:

The media coalition (“coalition”) comprising the below-listed national and local news organizations and associations writes to express its concern about reports that journalists covering the court-martial of Pfc. Bradley Manning have been unable to view documents filed in the proceeding. See, e.g., Josh Gerstein, Bradley Manning Defers Plea in WikiLeaks Case, POLITICO, Feb. 23, 2012, http://www.politico.com/news/stories/0212/73214.html (reporting that details of a proposed defense order aimed at limiting pretrial publicity in the case and other motions and orders filed therein and discussed during the first day of Manning’s court-martial were not publicly available). In light of the upcoming hearing this week, we respectfully urge the U.S. Department of Defense to take swift action to implement measures that will enable members of the news media to view documents filed in connection with the proceeding beforehand.

You will recall a similar group comprising news organizations and those who advocate on their behalf last fall successfully appealed to the Defense Department for greater and easier access to important information about military commission proceedings held at Guantanamo Bay. See, e.g., U.S. Dep’t of Def., Regulation for Trial by Military Commission (2011 Edition). As such, the coalition respectfully urges the government to implement similar reforms in its regulations governing court-martial proceedings generally and that of Manning specifically to ensure that military personnel tried stateside have the same rights to a public trial as those afforded accused terrorists.

The prosecution of an American service member for the alleged leak of the largest amount of classified information in U.S. history is a matter of intense public interest, particularly where, as here, that person’s liberty is at stake. Public oversight of the proceeding is of vital importance. Indeed, the interest in openness in this case is not mere curiosity but rather a concern about the very integrity of this nation’s military courts — their ability to oversee the proceedings by which military personnel have their day in court to answer to and defend against allegations of serious offenses.
Despite the recognition that such access helps promote a perception of fairness and foster a more informed and well-educated public, the overwhelming majority of court records filed in Manning’s court-martial have remained shielded from public view. See Gerstein, supra. This secrecy extends even to the court’s docket, meaning that journalists covering the proceeding are often unaware of what is being discussed therein. See id. The U.S. Supreme Court and the nation’s highest military courts have said the American press and public have a First Amendment right of access to criminal proceedings. But by refusing to provide reasonable and proper notice of such proceedings and the nature of the documents filed in connection therewith, the military justice system has severely undercut this foundational tenet of American democracy.

Perhaps more significantly, though, this policy belies the Defense Department’s recent renewed commitment to transparency in the trials of accused terrorists at Guantanamo Bay, as reflected in its creation of a new Web site that contains documents filed in the proceedings, its establishment of a viewing location at Fort Meade that allows the press and public to watch a closed-circuit broadcast of the hearings and its adoption of updated regulations governing the commissions. These new guidelines attempt to address the complaints of journalists covering trials at Guantanamo Bay that the long classified review procedures and otherwise heightened secrecy are significant obstacles to their effective reporting on the offshore commissions. In response to these concerns, the government has committed to providing reporters contemporaneous access to court documents from each of the military commission’s cases against accused terrorists and a new process whereby they may object to the designation of information as “protected” and thereby shielded from public view. Ironically, however, these journalists’ stateside counterparts covering Manning’s military trial face the same unnecessary degree of secrecy that makes reporting on military court proceedings incredibly difficult.

Accordingly, the coalition respectfully urges the Defense Department to implement in domestic court-martials the same measures provided for in the revised regulations governing trials by military commission, namely:

- posting online, on the military commission Web site or elsewhere, filings and decisions that do not require classification security review within one business day, posting filings that do require a security review within 15 business days (except in “exceptional circumstances”) and posting unofficial transcripts of the proceedings “as soon as practicable after the conclusion of a hearing each day” (Regulation for Trial by Military Commission, supra, at 75–76);

- authorizing military judges overseeing court-martials to rule on any dispute raised by the parties or the public regarding filings, rulings, orders or transcripts over whether the document was appropriately designated as “protected” (id. at 69); and

- allowing the prosecution to take an interlocutory appeal on any order or ruling of a military judge that relates to the closure of proceedings to the public or the protection of classified or protected information; id. at 105.
Swiftly adopting these media access reforms will help ensure that the public’s right of access to stateside military trials is at least as strong as its right to participate in and serve as a check upon the judicial process that oversees trials of accused terrorists. As in the past, we are happy to assist the government in the development of these reforms. Please do not hesitate to contact us if we can be of further assistance to you.

Sincerely,

Lucy A. Dalglish, Executive Director
